BILIOUSNESS, Indigestion, Headache, Liver Difficulties

of all kinds cured by

BELL'S SARSAPARILLA.

This Remedy has proved itself a sterling medicine for clearing the stomach of bilious matter so common in the spring months. Physicians continue to commend it. Hundreds are constantly recommending it to others by those who have had experience using it for these troubles.

Bell's Sarsaparilla is made of pure extracts, herbs and barks. It contains no nauseating syrups to ferment in the stomach, as a tonic helps to prevent this, and thus strengthen the digestive organs.

Read the Following Testimonials.

From GEO. S. MAYNARD, [for 8 years a member of the Boston Police Force.]

"A. M. ROBINSON, JR.—I have been troubled for a long time with Dyspepsia and Indigestion. I have tried many so-called remedies with no beneficial results. I finally got a bottle of your Bell's Sarsaparilla and it has benefited me more than all others. Before half the bottle was gone I was better, by the time I had used one bottle I was entirely free from pain, and my general health is better than for many years."

GEO. MAYNARD 18 Birch Street Bangor

From Conductor Chase, M. C. R. R. [between Bangor and Vanceboro.]

"For months I have been subject to severe attacks of liver trouble with terrible pain in my side, poor appetite, stomach troubles, etc. I tried what was recommended, but got no relief until I took Bell's Sarsaparilla. That hit my case. I am free from pain, and my general health is better than for many years."

I. G. CHASE, M. C. R. R. Bangor

Bell's Sarsaparilla proved the Remedy.

"A. M. Robinson, Jr.—I am more than willing to add my testimony to the value of Bell's Sarsaparilla. For several years I have been troubled with heartburn, indigestion and general debility. I have taken Bell's Sarsaparilla for a few weeks and am now perfectly well. I have consulted physicians and tried different kinds of medicines, but have found relief in this Sarsaparilla alone."

MRS. M. S. LLOYD, Bangor

Republican District Convention

The Republicans of the Fourth Congressional District of Maine are opposed to the Administration which has brought into power the Democratic party, and are determined to do all in their power to defeat the Democratic candidates at the polls on Monday, April 14th, 1884, at 10 o'clock A. M. for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Representative to the Forty-third Congress of the United States, and of nominating a candidate for Presidential Elector for the District, and of selecting two delegates to represent the District in the Republican National Convention to be held at Chicago, Illinois, Tuesday, June 3d, 1884, and of transacting such other business as may properly come before said Convention.

Each city, town and plantation will be entitled to one delegate and one additional delegate for every seventy-five votes cast for the Republican candidate for Governor in 1883, and a fraction of forty votes over one half.

W. H. DUNTON

E. P. WYATT
C. A. WILKINS
NICHOLAS HOBBS
JAMES A. MILLIKEN
EDWARD P. LOVERING
District Committee.

Bangor, Me., March 10, 1884.

Senator Chilcott says that the Republicans of Illinois are solid for protection.

The Republicans made decided gains in the western municipal elections Tuesday.

The Pennsylvania Democrats evidently do not intend to turn their face toward free trade.

The New York senate has passed a bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of cocaine.

Representative Converse, Democratic member of Congress from Ohio, declares that the Democratic majority to reduce the tariff on wool growers of Ohio ought to vote to reject the duty on wool, as assured Democratic defeat in Ohio this fall.

In selecting the citizens who will have an opportunity to express their views to the Legislature as to the advisability of celebrating the semi-centennial of the city, Bangor should be a large attendance at the mass meeting to-night for that the decision which is evidently to be expressed may be the sentiment of a large majority of the people.

The Lewiston Journal declares that Democratic success in Ohio this fall will depress the wool growers of that State to the extent of the duty on wool, as assured Democratic defeat in Ohio this fall.

We must get down [illegible] its narrow [illegible] pays tribute to Pennsylvania. What fun in short, it is all that pleases us.

Mr. Morrison does not take as cheerful a view of the certain passage of his bill as some of the Washington correspondents do. It is understood that the Democratic caucus decided not to press the bill to a vote, but to allow it to be defeated by the votes of Democrats who are opposed to it. Mr. Morrison evidently sees the handwriting on the wall which caused Belshazzar to be disappointed at the vote by simply replied: Well I am not figuring on it or I wouldn't be here.

The Zion's Herald gives a full report of the state of prohibition in Maine by counties and townships, and a notable article from the pen of Rev. W. Dimmick, Esq., of Waterville. Mr. Dimmick charges the statement by one or two over-shrewd politicians of the prohibitory laws as a failure and a source of evil in Maine, and very justly says that he wishes to do justice to the writer, but that he cannot say that they wilfully state what they know to be false, but that their party zeal and prejudice blind their eyes to the true condition of affairs. Unconsciously they have placed in the hands of our opponents a powerful weapon, which they will not hesitate to use to the best of their ability.

The Commercial of last evening contained an article in which they denied the statement that arose in the sub-committee investigating the loss of the Jeannette over the admission of certain evidence. The question at issue was whether or not witnesses should be permitted to give their opinion of the wisdom of Delong in selecting the course of retreat which he adopted. The counsel for Mrs. Delong objected and Mr. Boutelle sustained his objection, but the other members of the committee. During the discussion that followed Mr. Counsel for Dr. Collins interrupted [illegible] that he would like to make an inquiry [illegible] disturbance was over. The characteristic of perfectly proper discussion in the committee was emphatically objected to by Mr. Boutelle who was seconded by Mr. McAdoo the latter gentlemen informing the counsel that the committee was capable of settling these questions without the aid of the lawyers.

Killing Banks to Help Free Trade.

[New York Tribune.]

This Democratic organization of the House with its one-man power has one good feature. It enables the country to fix responsibility upon somebody.

Mr. William R. Morrison of Illinois, is doing what he can to destroy the National banking system. For this he is by him and by no one else that can be in the House on the Morrison bill is prevented. That bill was designed to save the bank circulation from extinction to prevent the contraction of such circulation which everybody call for bonds produced. It was offered by a pronounced Democrat and passed the Senate by Democratic votes. It is the opinion at Washington that the bill would readily pass the House if reported but Mr. Morrison has thus far deprived the House of power to act, even on a bill so needed and unobjectionable, by his pocket veto. He does not report it and his committee does not like to treat the next friend of the Speaker with the emphasis which his course deserves.

Whether Mr. Morrison means to make war on the banking system is for him to say. The effect of his conduct is to continue and accelerate the retirement of currency. He has claimed to be a believer in sound currency, and in the National banking system; and his constituents who would not have trusted him if they had not supposed that he would do his duty in that regard. But he prevents action on the most necessary measure, for reasons which may be known only to himself.

The excuse given for Mr. Morrison is that he has resolved, not to report any other measure until his own tariff bill has been acted upon. Those who believe that the National banking system ought not to be exposed to harm, in order to serve Mr. Morrison's ambitions aims in regard to the tariff question, will have opportunity to show their feeling when his bill gets within range of their votes—if it ever does.

Delegates to Chicago

[Kennebec Journal.]

The time for holding conventions in this State to elect delegates to the Chicago convention is drawing near. The sentiment of the State is very decidedly in favor of the nomination of Mr. Blaine as the Republican candidate for President. But the attitude of Mr. Blaine in regard to taking any steps to promote his own election, here or elsewhere, is in conformity to his declarations, and will be followed by the Presidential office.

Worse Than Useless

[Boston Journal.]

For some weeks we have been earnestly searching our Democratic exchanges for the purpose of finding some word of approval of the present Democratic House of Representatives. This search has proved a fruitful one. For the first time in the history of Democratic journalism, it has been revealed that a majority of the Democratic press is not in favor of the party in power. It seems to sound the keynote of the House in which its party has only two-thirds of the votes. It has now been in session four months and what has it accomplished? Nothing. The only bill which provides for the every relief of the people of the United States is the bill which provides for the free coinage of silver. But there are reasons why this bill has not been passed. But there are reasons why this controlling element shows great energy and perseverance.

Some time since the most flagrant pension job that was ever devised was reported in the House. It was a proposition to pension every body whose name had been on a muster roll during the Mexican war and all those who had participated in several Indian wars. This bill was before the House for the first time in the House. It was a loosely drawn, ill-defined measure, which would have taken $150,000,000 out of the Treasury. Shipping interests, bankruptcy bills, national bank legislation and all other matters affecting the industrial and commercial welfare of the country were of no account compared with the scheme. A day was to be fixed for its consideration, and consideration meant passage. All day and all night the Democrats fought to secure the quorum necessary to assign the bill, and it was finally obtained. In due time the bill was passed after striking out the survivors of the Indian wars. And it was passed by an almost solid Democratic vote.

It was under the direction of the Carlisle-Morrison element that the Bonded Whiskey bill—denounced by Democratic journals as a job—was brought before the House. It was defeated because it was shown that it was not entirely without merit that many Democrats did not dare to vote for it. If the present Carlisle-Morrison leadership could have had its way the bill would have been passed. Thus the session has been frittered away. Nothing has been done, because the present leadership in the House lacks broad views and elevated purposes. This fact is now so generally recognized that Democratic papers, as we have before stated, have not the impudence to even attempt

Commenting on the recent free trade speech of Representative Hurd, who said he didn't care two cents about the question of a principle, the principle thing being to get the Democratic party with its face towards free trade, the New York World (Dem.) says: What a glorious record it will be to see the Democratic party standing with its face towards free trade and its back to the Presidency. What a humiliating but elevating spectacle to behold the Democratic statesmen with their eyes fixed on their star of hope, the Morrison bill tumbling head over heels into the river of Debt.

There is only one obstacle in the way of Mr. Hurd's self-sacrificing and high toned policy. It is almost probable that the Democratic National Convention, when it meets, will pay some attention to expediency and be more anxious to nominate a candidate who can carry New York, New Jersey, California, Nevada and probably Connecticut and Ohio, than to put to the platform a free trade plank which would lose all these states. Of course this would be descending to a lower level than that occupied by Mr. Hurd, but statesmanship at times requires such descents, and it will be stupid policy if the Convention should persist in keeping them.

On the first ballot Samuel J. Tilden will be the choice of a majority of the Democratic delegates in the Convention, but he will not be nominated for the reason that he is unpopular with the Democracy of the country. The great state of Pennsylvania manifests unprecedented enthusiasm for him. In New York there is a powerful faction in his favor while in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, New England there is a strong opposition to him. The convention to be held this month in a larger one than still the Democratic House takes to heart this warning. Bills have been offered which will prevent this contingency. The House should and no doubt will pass them. When it was proposed to make dollars of seventy-three cents pieces of silver, but that was defeated by the votes of the Democratic members from the Pacific coast, who will gamble a few specie dollars to get a good thing, and then in order to discredit silver as a money metal, they will vote for the Democratic nominee for President.

Let this fact be known in Maine so that the Democratic delegates to the State convention can be instructed to send no one but a true and tried friend of Mr. Blaine to Chicago. This will be in accord with the sentiment of the party. Before all other men mentioned Mr. Blaine is the favorite candidate of Maine Republicans because the man whom they know and trust, and they will not be driven by their enemies to support any other candidate.

FORTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS—First Session

Senate.

WASHINGTON, April 9. Mr. Hill from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads reported favorably the bill to establish a postal telegraph system. Mr. Hill remarked that the committee was unanimous as to the first ten sections of the bill which relate to doing the work by contracts with existing companies, but that a majority of the committee were opposed to the section relating to the construction or purchase of lines by the Government The provision relating to the liability of the contracting company for a failure to correctly and promptly transmit messages has been amended by limiting such liability to 500 times the amount paid for transmission. Two new features have been added to the bill.

The first authorizes the contracting company to employ a postmaster as its agent and operator at any postal telegraph office where the telegraphic receipts are insufficient to pay the salary of an operator, and to pay him a commission not exceeding 50 per cent of the charges on messages transmitted from the office

The second requires the Postmaster General to secure proval as in the contract which shall protect postal telegrams against disclosure in order of transmission in favor of telegrams received at such of the company's offices as are not operated under the provisions of the bill

Mr. Harrison from the Committee on Finance reported adversely a bill to refund the excess of duties caused by the extraordinary over valuation of the Austrian flown in bottles in particular

A bill promoting Capt. Thos L. Casey, John C. S N, retired to the rank of Rear Admiral on the same list, was taken up and after some remarks indefinitely postponed

A popular impression, Mr. Vest said, was that the civil war was a beginning of the decline of American merchant marine but this impression was not correct The decline began six years before the war. Referring to the shipping bill reported to the Senate by Mr. Frye, from the Committee on Commerce Mr Vest said it was like capriciously which mistook a deep seated disease for a mere cutaneous eruption After reference by Mr Vest to the increased cost of running American vessels as compared with others, Mr. Frye inquired how that would be remedied by putting vessels under the American flag

Mr Vest replied he would repeal the inimitous navigation laws. This gave rise to a running debate. In the course of which Mr. Frye said if ships could be purchased to-day anywhere in the world under the flag of the United States, no American citizen would dream of making the purchase Therefore free trade in ships would amount to nothing, because they could not be run in competition in wages

Mr Vest said free ships were not the only thing necessary He would reform the whole protective system which has struck down the whole American merchant marine.

Mr Frye — By increasing American wages

Mr Vest denied that the tariff gave the American workingman higher wages except as it paid with one hand and robbed with another, taking it out of the cost of living

Mr Hale suggested there was nothing in the naval appropriation bill that related to the merchant marine. Referring to Mr Vest's statement that $365,000,000 had been expended on the navy since the war, Mr Hale said not a dollar of it had been spent in new ships What we wanted was new ships

Mr. McPherson, in the course of his remarks, said while the Government persisted in keeping the present Secretary of the Navy it could not wonder at the lack of confidence in the Navy Department

Mr. Hale, after referring to the efforts made by the Secretary to increase the efficiency of the navy, said what had kept England neutral during the late war was the immense power which America has shown in improving a navy

Mr Hale defended the Secretary of the Navy from the suggestion and asked if any man could put his finger on a single item the Secretary had done in the administration of his office that ever suggested [illegible] action

Mr. Bayard inquired if the steel cruiser provided had been engrafted on the appropriation bill the Senate having already passed a bill making a special provision for them

Mr Hale replied the bill had gone to the House and that the House seemed disposed to let it be disposed The Committee on Appropriations had therefore, in accordance with repeated precedent, concluded to put an provision for the building of cruisers into the appropriation bill.

Mr Bayard did not deem it proper for either House to attempt to coerce the other

Mr Vest said while recognizing the ability of the Secretary of the Navy he believed the fruition hope of that officer was such as to fail him to do this right a public calamity that the interests of the country should not warrant

Mr. Hale asked whether Mr. Vest meant that to his office had in the administration of his office done anything of the character indicated

Mr Vest said he could not put his finger on any one act but the officer's administration that would subject him to criticism

Mr Edmunds stated that he had been much interested in the accounts of the flourishing condition of the navy before the war. He read a letter from James Buchanan, dated Sept. 1853, addressed to Hon Henry A Wise of Va. in which he said "So America is boasted of our navy but what is it in comparison with the navies of England, or France? I suppose those powers should determine to prevent us from interfering in Cuba, in case the time should arrive when we ought to interfere, they had the naval power to carry out their determination. We should at least have navy enough to command our own coast. Mr Buchanan further recommended that a part of the surplus in the treasury should be expended in constructing a navy. Mr Edmunds said that was all the Senate wanted to do.

The Senate then went into executive session and when the doors reopened adjourned.

House.

The bill amending the act regulating the removal of causes from State to Federal courts was made the continuing special order for April 12

A bill was passed providing for the adoption of the revised International regulations for preventing collisions at sea.

Mr Hopkins of Pennsylvania offered the following preamble and resolution which were referred to the Committee on Commerce

Whereas, It is charged that the present system of transporting live stock by railroad companies is so barbarous and destructive that 10 per cent. of the animals perish in consequence of this treatment and the flesh of the remainder is unfit for human food, and, whereas, it is charged that the flesh of animals so treated, including that of dead and dying, is sold to the people and cannot when dressed be distinguished from sound meats and is the source of many and various diseases; and, whereas it appears by a report of the Committee on Agriculture of this House that the loss by shrinkage alone in the weight of animals caused by this system of transportation amounted to the immense sum of $8,000,000 on the business of 1870 and must now be nearly or quite $10,000,000 per annum; and whereas it has been charged that said railroads by a system of favoritism give to a small number of persons known as the association of owners a bonus or right of almost $15 on every carload of beef cattle shipped from the west to the east said sum being no part of the actual legitimate cost of transportation, but is upon the contrary collected by transporters and paid over to the so-called owners as a more gratuity; and whereas the loses and charges above constitute in the aggregate an enormous tax on a necessary article of food which must be borne by the producer and consumer alike diminishing the just profits of the meat growers of the west and placing meat food in many instances beyond the reach of the poor in the east; and whereas it is charged that the act of Congress requiring that the railroad companies unload the stock in transit every 28 hours is habitually violated therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire whether [illegible] will be [illegible] existing [illegible] transportation of live stock by railroad companies from the west to the east and to report by bill or otherwise.

The Speaker having ruled that the unfinished business was the Oregon Central Land Grant, Mr. Stockslager of Indiana under the order made Monday asked the House to consider the public building bills and moved to take from the Speaker's table for reference to the Committee of the Whole the Senate bill for the enlargement of the New Haven Post Office, but as the yeas and nays were called for he withdrew the motion.

He then moved to go into committee on public building bills, which was agreed to.

A discussion of points of order consumed most of the afternoon and but two bills were acted on, those making appropriations for buildings at Keokuk, Ia., and Waco, Texas, which were favorably reported At 6 30 P. M. the House took a recess until 11 A. M. to-morrow.

THE HALIFAX DISASTER

Capt. Schoonhaven Examined

HALIFAX, April 9 The inquiry into the loss of the steamer Stillmann was resumed to-day Capt Schoonhaven made a sworn statement detailing the circumstances connected with the wreck which he said was already published. He feared the fog whistle a half [illegible] before the vessel struck but it was [illegible] too late He considered the cause of the loss of the vessel to have been the strong current to westward. He had overrun his distance and perhaps there was some magnetic attraction to the colepass which put him further south than he had thought himself to be. He had estimated that he was at least five to seven miles astern of his real position.

Had a gun been fired from the island when the signal men first saw him he would certainly have kept off and saved the ship The gunners had since told him they had instructions not to fire while the fog whistle was in order and wording Johnston, of the Marine and Fisheries Department, corroborated this statement in regard to their instructions Had there been a life boat on the island he might have been warned off and many more lives saved

PROFESSIONAL SWINDLER

The Negro Missionary.

NEW LONDON, Conn., April 9 "Rev." W. A. Smith, the colored man now in jail here, waiting trial in the Superior Court for pretending to be a missionary, made a confession to an Associated Press reporter. He said he was a slave in St. Louis and bought his freedom in 1862 from Mary Smith. He raised $800 to purchase money by New England churches, and was licensed as a preacher when a slave by Rev. Mr Clark, of St. Louis, also colored. Smith said he led a Christian life for a time and then took to swindling church people and drink. He was never authorized as a missionary, but made a good living by false representations. He has been in the swindling business ten years, and in all the money received on himself. He says he never gave a cent for missionary work and never had an accomplice. He is the original Smith who secured a letter of recommendation from John F. Gough.

He has been to Africa several times. He would work his passage to America and after swindling the church people by getting money to found missionary homes [illegible] to Cattoorta. Give it a trial for those distressed feelings.

Bismark's Retirement.

BERLIN, April 9 Prince Bismark, in a private conversation in which he explained his withdrawal from the Prussian Ministry is reported to have said: "I am 70 years old. My nerves are in bad condition. I have not time to be unctuous. The telegraph fearfully multiplies my work. Germany is interested in whatever happens in the capitals of the world, including New York and Washington. The world is a chess board and I must watch the moves affecting Germany. It is necessary now to study not only domestic politics, but also wire pullers, financiers and current opinion everywhere, and to act rapidly upon information telegraphed in haste. The chancellorship is no sinecure. Its duties might tax a younger man's strength Without the Emperor's support I could not get through."

"Where I Love, I Love Forever."

She is a little young maid who sang,
Close by the cottage's linden stiffen,
Swaying soft to and fro as the notes thus rang
Out on the air to her the birds were flitting,
Merrily, merrily sang the birds,
But more merrily sang the words,
Spoke "Where I love, I love forever."

It was a youth just passing by
While the maid is singing, oh, so sweetly!
Was to the garden gate drew nigh,
And listened to them, entranced completely.
For the sound of a voice so sweet and clear
Was rapturous music to his ear,
And he said, "Ah, never
Would I wish to sever
From one who loves, and loves forever!"

The maiden smiled on her lover's suit,
When at her feet he made confession;
Her eyes were bright, but her voice was mute,
A sign she gave for her love in expression.
But now together their lives are set,
They sing in unison this duet:
"We'll allsever,
Never, never,
For where we love, we love forever."

A STORY OF TRIAL AND ADVENTURE ON SHORE, AT SEA, AND IN THE JUNGLE.

The Manor of Birchmoor was one of the oldest and most extensive in England. The manor-house was a grand old mansion.

The domain was ample. There were fair lawns and gardens, and extensive parks and preserves, broad meadows and fruitful slopes, and many a mile of dense old forest.

It was towards noon of a pleasant day late in the summer that two men stood by the lodge gate of Birchmoor Park. One of them was Peter Brun, the keeper, and the other was Jason Smart, an old friend of Peter. Both were men past the middle age.

As soon as they had exchanged greetings, Jason said:

"Now, Peter, I want you to tell me about the family. Tell me—let's see—about a score of years since I left Birchmoor. Sir John was then hale and hearty, and had three years old, and we thought he'd never would marry, but I hear he has come."

"Yes," said the keeper, slowly, "he has done it, twice which was first over too much."

"You remember that his lordship lived those many years a bachelor on account of a bitter disappointment in early life. He had made up his mind that he would never marry, but he found reason to change his purpose. Out in India there was a certain Tom Rainsford, to whom his lordship was particularly attached. This Tom Rainsford was a colonel, and he saved the division of Sir Jasper Wallace at Hazepoor by his own individual forethought and daring. But he himself fell—shot, just as the victory was won."

"Sir John heard of the death of Colonel Tom Rainsford, and he also heard that a widow had been left, and he sent out word to the widow that she might come and find a home at Birchmoor if she wished it; seems that Colonel Tom had been a rollicking, free-hearted fellow, and had left nothing of property—not even enough to pay his debts. So his widow accepted Sir John's offer, and came home to England and to Birchmoor. She had one child—Ethel, three years old—a boy named Arthur,—and one of the brightest and most little fellows I ever saw. The servants all fell in love with him."

"I saw Isabel Rainsford when she first came, and always on creature I never laid my eyes upon. Sir John took to her by nature, and she, in turn, was devoted to him. At the end of two years Sir John offered her his heart and his hand, and she accepted both, and then I became Lady Birchmoor. And the years have flown happily and child Sir Arthur Berwick."

"Their married life was a happy one. Sir John loved his young and beautiful wife with all his heart, and she was sincerely attached and devoted to him. But their happiness was not to last long. In the years after their marriage Lady Isabel died, and for a time Sir John was like one distracted. About this time the government had occasion to send a commissioner upon important business to India, and Lord Birchmoor was selected for the office. He accepted without hesitation, and at once made preparations for his departure. He left the manor in charge of his sister, Agatha, and her daughter, also, he left Arthur, now grown to be ten years old."

"Sir John went out to India, and there fell in with Lady Helen Travers. This woman was the widow of a Sir Theobald Travers, who had gambled on a fortune, and died deeply in debt. She was past the middle age—somewhere about fifty—but of that peculiar vital temperament, and of that tone and of vigor and beautiful flow of blood, which preserve the stamp of youth far into the meridian of life. She was handsome, and she was bold; and, above all, she was clever. Sighted and calculating. She had a son, named Harold, in the army, with a captain's commission, and for some years Captain Harold Travers had managed to make enough at the gaming-table to give a specific a comfortable support."

"It was said by those who professed to know that much of the captain's good luck at whist and ecarte was due to the covert aid of Lady Helen. I won't pretend to assert anything about Lady Helen's prowess in cheating at cards, but I can say she played a strong game with Sir John, and if she didn't blind him, then she must have given him upon a very slight scale. In just two years from the time she met her Ladyship became the wife of this woman. This Lady Helen Travers. But her whole game didn't play when she had won his hand and his name. She wanted something for her son."

"This Captain Harold Travers was thus very much after his father's stamp. He was reckless and heartless, and had enough of polish to make his way in society. He went at work upon Sir John's good graces, and found his way into them. And when his lordship prepared for his return to England he allowed the captain to sell his commission and bear him company. And he did more: he allowed Harold to drop the name of Travers and to take that of Berwick in its place, thus recognizing him as an adopted son. You must understand that Sir John was now past sixty, a I more easily worked upon than formerly. He fancied that he was never so firm of will, and never so independent; but there was one of the helm that knew how to govern him."

"When his lordship, with his new family, reached home, Arthur had grown to be a youth of sixteen, and he was acknowledged by all who knew him to be the handsomest, and the bravest, and the strongest boy of his years in our riding. He had cut up some wild pranks, to be sure, but nothing that came of an evil disposition. The new Lady Birchmoor pretended a strong love for him, and Harold was openly very kind to him. Within a few months after Sir John's return Arthur was sent away to school at Oxford; and there he has been most of the time until three months ago, when he came home with the resolution to study no more."

"At first Strahan had only planned that Arthur should pursue a course of study that would fit him for public political life, and then we fancied that he meant to make the lad his heir—for you will understand that his lordship has had no children of his own—but after a time, in three years from the lad's first entrance at college, Sir John changed the plan, and wanted him to prepare for the church. When the old servant heard of this—and they heard of it when Arthur came home at vacation—they were sure that Lady Birchmoor had been at work, and that the son of Isabel Rainsford was not sure of inheriting the manor."

"However, Arthur resolved that he would not be a churchman, and when Sir John was satisfied that his opposition could not be overcome, he proposed the bar instead. But the youth would not have that either. He would enter the army. In fact, it was his earnest wish to join the army, and he once said to me, said he: 'Peter, when my school-days are over I shall go into the army. I would rather go in as a private, and carry a musket and a knapsack, than be a hanger-on at this place, and in this company.' I knew very well what he meant. I knew that he knew that Lady Birchmoor hated him, and that Harold, with all his smiling surface, was bitterly jealous of him."

"But I won't spin it out any longer than I can help. Three months ago Arthur came home from college, and he came home in debt. He had been wild and extravagant. Sir John paid his debts and gave him a lecture. Arthur knew that some one had been undermining him, and he took the lecture badly. After that, he naked his lordship to buy him a commission in a regiment which had just been ordered to India. Sir John flatly refused, nor did he give his reasons but he gave another lecture, which the lad took with very ill grace, and no wonder, because he knew that his ladyship was at the bottom of it."

"From all of which," said Jason, "I infer that Sir John Harold sings in the chief, and in order to accomplish this he must get rid of his rival."

"You are right, Jason," said Peter, eagerly. "Don't you mean to do something? Isn't there some way in which you can lend the young man a helping hand?"

"I assure there is, Jason. He has friends on the watch. We'll open Sir John's eyes soon enough."

"And I should say the sooner you opened them the better."

"We must have something positive, you know, to work upon. We old servants have to work carefully."

"Aye,—there's the rub!" said Smart, starting up from his seat. "While you are hurking carefully, the bolder ones will come in with strong heroes and win the field. But come,—I'll be to look through the old park. We can talk as we walk."

The lodge-keeper arose, and led the way out into the broad avenue, and when his companion had surveyed the fair scenes about the gate they turned towards the mansion, taking one of the footpaths. They had gone but a short distance when Peter pulled his companion by the sleeve, and drew him behind the shrubbery.

"Hold back, Jason! Now you'll see a sight. Don't move, but look sharp."

As the keeper thus spoke Jason turned and there came in sight the form of a young woman, tall, broad and heavy of figure, and inclined to obesity. Her head was small, and the face was low-browed and sullen. Her age might have been anywhere from five-and-thirty to forty.

The woman was older, and thought she had some features in common with her companion, especially about the eyes and mouth, yet she was what the world might call handsome—that is, handsome for one who had passed the meridian of life."

"What do you think of that woman?" asked the keeper, after the two had passed on."

"I don't know about the woman, but as a judge of the sex. But I thought I saw the man was in sight. Who is he?"

"He calls himself the Honorable Harold Berwick."

"And the woman is his mother?"

"Yes, she is the present Lady Birchmoor."

"And can't you see by the look of it that man's face and by the way he whispers what he's got to say that he is scheming some sort of villainy?"

"I'm sure he's out of his regular line. I should say so. And she don't look like a saint. See how eager she is, Jason, Peter, if there's villainy afoot, she's got as much interest in it as he has. Mark my words."

When Lady Birchmoor and her son had passed on in sight, the keeper and his companion came out into the road and put their heads together towards the mansion.

And now, while the two old servants are viewing fanciful objects, we will follow Lady Birchmoor and her son. They entered upon a secluded spot, and by the principal paths, where they stopped, and where they pursued the conversation in which they had been engaged, pursued it to a point upon which they had not ventured while in a more exposed part of the grounds.

"Mother," said Harold, in a tone scarcely raised above a whisper, "what we do must be done quickly. It is very evident that Sir John still cherishes a lingering love for Arthur, in spite of his patronage."

"I think he does, Harold, your mother, my son," replied Lady Birchmoor, relative."

"I know the fact, and I see that you understand perfectly well. And you know, also, that if Arthur Berwick is out of the way, I am the next heir. You know that I have sought to possess myself of his good graces, and that I have succeeded to a certain extent. You know that I have sought to possess myself of his good graces, and that I have succeeded to a certain extent. You know that I have sought to possess myself of his good graces, and that I have succeeded to a certain extent."

"You need not mention that, Harold. I know his lordship's heart, and I know how to work upon it. We old servants must be careful. We old servants must be careful. We old servants must be careful."

"Yes, mother, I have full confidence in you. I know Arthur's temper, and I know how to work upon it. We old servants must be careful. We old servants must be careful. We old servants must be careful."

Not effluent, CERTAIN IN ITS ACTION, but harmless in all cases.

If it cleanses the Blood and Strengthens, it gives New Life to all the Important Organs of the body. The natural action of the Kidneys is restored. The Liver is cleansed of all disease, and the Bowels move freely and healthily. In this way the worst diseases are expelled from the system.

Price, $1.00 LIQUID OR DRY, SOLD BY DRUGGISTS.

Dry can be sent by mail.
